ABSTRACT

Generally speaking, a portfolio is a systematic collection of a variety of student projects or artifacts, collected over time, that reflect a student's developmental progress made in one or more areas. For the class, "Portfolio Development in Reading and Language Arts Courses" (EDUC 508 at Saint Joseph College), the portfolio will demonstrate the student's progress, effort, and achievement with respect to the course objectives and includes evidence of self reflection. Due to the "constructivist" nature of the class, this assignment is to be developed collaboratively by the class. This paper considers some aspects of portfolio development, with topics such as: "What To Include in a Portfolio?"; "Class Assignments/Projects/Activities"; "Considering an Electronic Portfolio"; "How Big Should the Portfolio Be?"; and "Constructing the Portfolio." The paper concludes with a detailed portfolio evaluation rubric. (Contains 19 references.) (NKA)

Portfolio Development: Some Considerations

Due to the 'constructivist' nature of this class, this assignment will be developed collaboratively by the class. As a result, it will be modified as soon as you share your questions, comments, observations, and knowledge!

Introduction

What is a portfolio? What is the purpose of the portfolio?! What should be included in a portfolio? How big should the portfolio be? All students and teachers ask these questions when they realize that they will be creating personal portfolios. The term portfolio often brings to mind a personal collection of works by artists, photographers, models or investors. Generally speaking, a portfolio is a systematic collection of a variety of student products or artifacts, collected over time, that reflect a student's developmental and progress made in one or more areas. For our class, the portfolio will demonstrate your progress, effort and achievement with respect to the course objectives and include evidence of self-reflection.

What to Include in a Portfolio?

Since a portfolio is done with a student not to a student, you (the student) have to make many hard decision with respect to what to include in your portfolio. The list of what a portfolio might include is only limited by one's imagination. In the case of our class, your choices are guided by the course objectives. (EDUC 322 Developmental Reading in Elementary School; EDUC 507 Developmental Reading in Elementary School) In deciding what to include in your portfolio, consider the question of how the artifact might be addressing a course objective. Some things that can be included are:

Class Assignments/Projects/Activities

- Literacy autobiography
- Three Field Experience "Theory in Action" Papers
 - Focus on Classroom Environment
 - Focus on Nature of Teaching and Learning
 - Focus on Basal Reading Program
- Emergent literacy observation
- Electronic Threaded Discussions
- Course Conference (online class)
- Reading Discussion Groups notes
- Interviews with students and/or teachers
- Lesson plans you have created, analyzed, and/or evaluated
- Projects, surveys, reports and units from reading and writing
- Email correspondence with peers an/or professor
- Internet Artifacts
- Record of Internet activities engaged in
- Video and Analysis of oneself Teaching
- Favorite poems, songs, letters, and comments

If You're Considering an Electronic Portfolio (Required for EDUC 507 Developmental Reading in Elementary School), be sure to examine the sites listed below for further guidance in the development of an electronic portfolio.

Abrenica, Y. Electronic Portfolios. This report will define the meaning and use of electronic portfolios. It will answer questions as to the benefits and practicality of their use. An attempt will be made to guide beginners in creating an electronic portfolios by using a step by step instructions. The report will identify the equipment or technologies needed to accomplish such portfolios.

Lankes (1995) at <http://ericir.syr.edu/ithome/digests/portfolio.html> explains the use and construction of electronic portfolios in public school settings . Although the author discusses the use of three programs to create electronic portfolios, Aurbach's Grady Profile, Roger Wagner Publishing's HyperStudio and Claris' FileMaker Pro, one can also construct a web page for the same purpose as Victor Cristofaro (1998) did in EDUC 507 Developmental Reading in Elementary School.

Sidor, L. <http://red-lake.lakeheadu.ca/~lsidor/> states that educators develop into a community of learners thorough the process of creating a portfolio which demands self-evaluation and self-reflection. This experience gives us the opportunity to engage in learning and assessment activities similar to those our students which it is anticipated will lead to improved student performance.

Worcester, T. Electronic Portfolios site has a clear set of directions for creating an electronic portfolio. Check it out! <http://www.essdack.org/port/how.html>

How big should the portfolio be?

This is a difficult question to answer! When considering "how big" you should make the portfolio, you are encouraged to ask yourself the following questions:

- Do you have evidence in support of my effort, progress and achievement for all the course objectives?
- Do you need multiple artifacts for one objective if the objective seems very comprehensive?
- Can one artifact be connected to multiple objectives through the reflection?

Although these questions do not quantify the number of pages that should be in a portfolio, I have placed a maximum size limit based on my earlier experiences with portfolios. Oversized L.L. Bean bags and their electronic equivalents will not be looked upon favorably! You are strongly encouraged to examine the examples of student portfolios included in this document as links. The critical point is being selective in your artifacts and reflecting on their significance.

Constructing the portfolio

In constructing your portfolio, please consider the following:

Portfolio Structure

- Title Page
- Table of Contents
- Portfolio Introduction
- Course Objectives
- Artifacts & Reflections
- Summative Reflective Composition

Artifacts & Reflection: Questions for Consideration

- Why did you select this artifact?
- How did you benefit from this activity?
- How did this artifact help you achieve your objectives?
- How did this artifact influence your learning? thinking? teaching?
- How do you anticipate using this artifact in the future?

Summative reflective composition which addresses the following points:

- What did you learn about your own literacy?
- How do you anticipate your personal and professional literacy experiences might affect your teaching?
- What are your personal future literacy goals and what are your plans for achieving them?
